Portal offers courses on business skills

A new website called Parenthesis was launched yesterday, for white-collar workers to go online to pick up business and interpersonal skills.

Launched by the Employment and Employability Institute, the portal has more than 650 courses on topics such as project management, negotiation and IT.

Students learn through video-lectures, online discussions and case studies. Course durations and prices are listed on the site. Singaporeans and permanent residents who are NTUC members need to foot only half the bill - the other half is paid by the labour movement, to a cap of $250 every year.
